Handwriting benchmark sheet — My Life With Christ

Scan Notes reads printed pages well. Whether it reads handwriting is unproven. Copy each block below in the style asked for, photograph it with Scan notes, and keep the transcription before you correct it — the uncorrected text is the measurement.

Everything on this sheet is fictional, and must stay that way.

No real names, no real churches, and nothing from an actual journal. A benchmark page gets photographed, attached to a report and passed around; somebody's prayers are not a test fixture.

Section 1 — Neat printing

Copy in careful, separated block printing. This is the best case: if an engine cannot read this, it cannot read handwriting at all.

FICTIONAL-SCAN SECTION ONE
Pastor Alder Finch, Harbour Chapel, 14 March 2027
The second reading was Jhn 3:16 and the series is called Deep Water.
Three points: wait, watch, walk.
Attendance 148. Offering counted twice.

Section 2 — Normal handwriting

Copy in your everyday handwriting — the hand you would use for a shopping list. Not your best, not your fastest.

FICTIONAL-SCAN SECTION TWO
The shepherd leaves the ninety-nine and goes after the one.
Rev. Marisol Okonkwo asked us to read Eph 4:2-3 slowly, twice.
She said: patience is not politeness; it is staying.
Next week — chapter 11, verses 1 to 16.

Section 3 — Cursive

Copy in joined cursive. If you do not write cursive, write "not applicable" on the first line and leave the rest blank; a missing sample is honest and an imitation of cursive is not a measurement.

FICTIONAL-SCAN SECTION THREE
Grace does not arrive in proportion to effort.
Hymn 212, sung twice, verse 3 omitted.
Fictional Bay Fellowship, 7:30 in the evening.
Ask about the Thursday study group.

Section 4 — Natural note-taking

Do not copy anything. Write four or five lines the way you actually write during a talk: fast, abbreviated, with arrows and underlining if that is what you do. Invent the content — a sermon that never happened. Then, in the box at the bottom, print what you wrote*, so there is a ground truth to score against. You are the only person who can supply it.*

Now print what you wrote, so there is something to score against:

Scored as character error rate against the printed reference, with `Jhn 3:16` counted as the ground truth — an engine that returns `John 3:16` has substituted, and is scored wrong even though it guessed right. Generated from docs/ocr/handwriting-benchmark-sheet.md.
